Defendant's request to seal defendant's sentencing memorandum is denied as overbroad. Much of the information set forth in defendant's sentencing memorandum is of the nature typically addressed on the public record at the time of sentencing. In the court's view only one, and at the most two, sections of the sentencing memorandum contain information that could plausibly be the subject of a sealing order. Defendant's counsel is directed to file a sentencing memorandum on the public docket, as is normally the case, and a supplement with a request to seal only those portions of the current memorandum that arguably contain confidential information related to the
